Direct involvement by health department environmental sanitation personnel has been provided in surveying each migrant labor camp prior to their opening to ensure that all federal and state health and safety standards have been met. This commitment involves inspection and analysis of the water supply, sewage disposal system and refuse disposal system at each migrant camp used in the State. At the present time, Rural Manpower cooperates with the sanitation personnel in preoccupancy inspections.

In addition, there are a variety of ongoing activities by health department staffs targeted to correct identified environmental hazards at the community level. Local health departments provide professional expertise to the migrant program in environmental health assessment, assist referral patients in taking corrective actions, and assist in coordination of efforts among state, local, federal and volunteer agencies.

Rural Manpower Service

The South Carolina State Employment Service, (better known as Job Service or Rural Manpower) was created by the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933 and provides for a system of employment offices to serve individuals legally qualified to engage in gainful occupations including employment counseling and a farm placement service.

Services include job referral, placement, counseling, training, and testing. An outreach program is operated for the migrant or seasonal farmworker who may be in need of services while on home base or along the migrant stream. A concerted effort is made to contact these workers.

Additional services offered by Job Service includes pre-occupancy inspections of labor camps for clearing interstate clearance orders and securing housing certification. Employers who wish to use the intrastate and interstate clearance system under the Wagner-Peyser Act to recruit workers must assure the availability of free or public housing for workers being recruited and a preoccupancy housing inspection must be conducted, and Job Service staff must ascertain that the housing meets applicable standards.

The agency furnishes crew leaders with the necesary forms for the crew leader registration required under the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Farmworkers Protection Act (MSPA) and assists them in completing and submitting them to the Employment Standards Administration (Wage and Hour) who is charged with the enforcement of the Act.

The South Carolina Department of Labor is the agency of the State which has been designated by the Governor and the General Assembly as the agency responsible for administering the State Occupational Safety and Health Plan. Other divisions relating to migrant labor are the Division of Licensing and Investigation, the Migrant Labor Division, and working closely with the agency is the Migrant Commission.

I. Division of Occupational Safety and Health (OSH)
William M. Lybrand, Director
Phone: 758-3080

A. Inspection Activities: The purpose of the State Occupational Safety and Health Act is to assure working men and women a safe and healthful working environment. To see that the objectives of this act are met, the Inspection Division staff conducts inspections to assure compliance with safety standards, and initiates enforcement procedures in cases of noncompliance. The regulations for the temporary labor camps are included in the OSH General Industry Standard (CFR 1910.142a). OSH works closely with ETA, and ESA to eliminate any duplication of effort pertaining to migrant housing inspections.

B. Consultation Division-Robert Peck, Director: Since there are OSH standards which apply to temporary labor camps, there are consultative services available to the farmers upon request. Consultants are educational personnel; they are not enforcement personnel and a visit will not trigger a compliance inspection.

II. Division of Migrant Labor
Novelene Powell, Administrative Assistant
Phone: 758-2851

The Division of Migrant Labor was created to carry out the mandates set forth by the Commissioner of Labor and the Migrant Farmworkers Commission.

As the administrative arm of the Migrant Commission, the position requires maintaining a thorough knowledge of all local, state and federal regulations pertaining to agriculture and/or migrant labor, establishes effective working relationships with local, state and federal agencies that deal with agriculture, and conducts surveys and compiles information regarding migrant programs and services.

The Division also acts as liason between the agricultural community and the Department of Labor and between the agricultural employers, employees representatives, and employees of South Carolina and the U.S. Department of Labor.

SOUTH CAROLINA DEPARTMENT OF MENTAL HEALTH
2414 Bull Street
Columbia, S. C. 29202

William S. Hall, M.D.
Commissioner
Phone: 758-7701

The South Carolina Department of Mental Health is a catalytic agency concerned with maximizing human potential through prevention, treatment, and post-treatment programming. The State and each of its 46 counties are participants. At the present, the State is divided into 14 major geographical service areas. In each of these areas there is a local community mental health center serving the designated area with mental health programming which is designed to meet the needs of that particular locality. Thus, in those localities where special problems relate to migrant workers, programs suited to their particular concern are manifest. Migrant workers, like all other citizenry of the geographical area, are entitled to utilization of services normally available within the area. Although services are unique to the specific locale, these services might include such services as the following: inpatient; outpatient; education and consultation; partial hospitalization; and emergency services.

In addition to the 14 local geographical service centers scattered strategically within the State, there are also several specialized mental health facilities available to the citizenry. For the most part, these specialized services related to programmatic functions which call for centralization and cooperation, i.e., substance abuse or long-term inpatient care for the severely mentally ill. Of notable import, these centralized programs are utilized only as a last resort. The major thrust of policy and philosophy within the Department is to treat everyone as close to their home community as possible.

State facilities are accessible to any person within the State who seek their services. There are no residency requirements; however, for those needing intensive care of long duration, their residency status is assumed until otherwise established. Should legal residency be established in some other State, the individual may then be transferred to the home State for continued long term care. South Carolina enjoys a cooperative agreement with many of its sister States with regard to a transferring arrangement.

Listed are institutions and local community mental health centers for the convenience of anyone who may want further information. Each of these facilities would be more than happy to be of assistance.

State Extension Director

The Clemson University Extension Service, an educational arm of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, conducts educational programs in four broad areas: agricultural production and education, family living, youth, and community resource development.

Through its agents in each of the state's counties, the Extension Service provides out-of-school educational assistance locally. Each county's agents in agriculture and home economics can also call upon a state staff of specialists at Clemson University.

Many of the Extension's programs provide direct benefits to migrants. Work in agricultural production and marketing focuses on agricultural commodities which may provide a base for farm employment. Information is available to farmworkers and employers on proper crop production and harvesting practices.

The Extension Home Economics Agents, with offices in the county seat, conduct programs with instruction in a broad range of homemaking activities. Consumer education programs help families to make choices among the many consumer goods now available. These include food buying, health services, child care, clothing buying and sewing. Extension home economists are working in the area of mental health and personal relationships within the family. They work with people of all income levels, with migrant workers, urban and rural families, with youth and the aged.

In most counties program assistants, under the supervision of Extension Home Economists, are working with low income families to improve their nutrition, including how to use effectively the food stamps and supplemental foods they receive.

Since 1970, the East Coast Migrant Health Project, with a staff of health providers and social service workers, has served the migrant and seasonal agricultural workers along the eastern seaboard of the United States. It is funded annually chiefly by the Department of Health and Human Services authorized by the Migrant Health Act of 1962, and based upon legislative allocations.

To avoid duplication and to work within the system, the Project negotiates with existing health agencies/providers where seasonal professionals are not always available for placement of specific staff who fit into the local area program and services. The ECMHP staff members including bi- and multi-linguals, are recruited for medical and allied health service, as well as support and general services beneficial to a diverse cultural population. The ECMHP places physicians, nurse practitioners, community health nurses, health educators, social service workers within budget limitations where the need is greatest.

Two aspects of ECMPH's operation are unique: 1) mobility and 2) outreach. Field staff move according to seasonal needs and in their own cars search for camp and individual locations of migrant and seasonal workers to determine direct or referred services.
